

Biodata of Dr. Shengli NIU

Dr. Shengli Niu was trained in medicine and specialized in public health, epidemiology and occupational health (MD, MPH & MSc). Dr Niu had worked for the Ministry of Health of the People's Republic of China for eight years and for the World Health Organization for two years at its Beijing Office before he joined the ILO in 1994. He is currently working as a coordinator and senior specialist in occupational Health at the Programme on Safety and Health at Work and the Environment (SafeWork) of the International Labour Office in Geneva, Switzerland.

Dr. Niu has led a number of international efforts in developing global policies on occupational safety and health including the updating of the ILO's international list of occupational diseases and the development of international guidelines on workers' health surveillance and on national systems for recording and reporting of occupational diseases. He is currently leading an international expert group to develop ILO's international guidelines on diagnostic criteria for occupational diseases.